This leaflet is part of the public relations activity of Deutsche Rentenversicherung; it is generally handed out free of charge and is not intended to be sold.
Dear parents,

Your children’s health is deeply important to the Deutsche Rentenversicherung. Therefore, we offer rehabilitation services for children and young people who suffer from a chronic illness or whose health is impaired or at risk. In order to ensure the success of the rehabilitation, follow-up services may also be offered.

This leaflet clarifies the most important questions about rehabilitation for children and young people. You can find further information online at www.deutsche-rentenversicherung.de/kinderreha.

What can rehabilitation do for your child?
Rehabilitation at a young age can safeguard his/her quality of life and earning capacity later in life.

Its first priority, however, should be to restore or improve the health and abilities of your child so that he/she can participate fully in school or leisure activities again.

What will your child receive?
There are many specialist clinics with state-of-the-art medical equipment for the rehabilitation of children and young people. When choosing a clinic, we try to accommodate the individual needs of your child.

Your child may receive outpatient rehabilitation, either for the whole day or shorter periods.
Inpatient rehabilitation normally lasts a minimum of four weeks. If it appears medically necessary, this can also be extended.

First of all, your child will be given a customised rehabilitation plan. This includes medical, pedagogic, physiotherapeutic or even job-orientated services as required.

Your child will be looked after in a group of children of similar ages. To ensure that children miss as little schoolwork as possible, they receive lessons in the main school subjects.

For which clinical symptoms can rehabilitation for children and young people be helpful?
Rehabilitation can always be taken into consideration, in cases where your child’s poor health condition could cause negative impacts on their future ability to work. It is also taken into consideration if they are partly or completely unable to attend school or carry out an apprenticeship due to their health. Rehabilitation aims to remedy or reduce these restrictions, hereby improving your child’s health.

For example, rehabilitation may be considered if your child is overweight or suffers from respiratory, skin, musculoskeletal illness, mental disorders or neurological conditions.

It is not possible to take part in rehabilitation if your child has an acute illness, in particular an infectious disease.

Which requirements must be fulfilled?
At least one parent must have paid pension insurance contributions.

What is the age limit for rehabilitation for children and young people?
As a general rule, children and young people are eligible for rehabilitation until the age of 18. This can be extended until the maximum age of 27 if the young person is at school or in training, or taking part in a voluntary social or ecological year or the federal voluntary service scheme. The same applies to young people who are unable to look after themselves owing to a disability.

What costs will be paid?
- Rehabilitation costs for the child
- Food and accommodation costs for the child
- Travel expenses
- In some cases, costs for an accompanying person

When is it possible to accompany a child?
For children who have not yet reached their 15th birthday, you can also apply to have travel expenses paid for someone to accompany the child on the journey to and from the clinic.

Children may be accompanied for the duration of the rehabilitation, should this be necessary in order for the rehabilitation to be carried out or for it to be successful. This is to be expected if, amongst other reasons, your child is not yet twelve years old.
